

About Chris Noble.

Chris is a brand-thinking, absurdly detailed creative/art director with an unwaveringly empathetic eye, lots of years at the wheel and an inherent need to learn and innovate.

A thoughtful, effective leader who can work solo or in a pack, Chris has done it all – mostly – and has kept everyone happy with his award-winning work and subtle sense of humor.

As you'd hope, he's a master of the print-relevant Adobe applications and very good in the video and web apps as well as Keynote. He can work SketchUp, Office, and code, and learns any other necessary skills sharpish.

He can also shoot decent photos, illustrate (photo, vector and hand), generally run things, write – he wrote this – and, being English¹, make a proper cup of tea.

Here is a snapshot of his career to date. (Zoom into the small print for further backstory.)

Big Brand Design Collaboration Campaigns Ideation Environments

Senior Designer (LTD),
adidas Global Brand Design,
March 2016 – August 2017

- Built out new adidas NYC flagship retail store with environment and evergreen design and graphics, visual storytelling, wayfinding, collateral design and much more.
- Flagship store ground floor product “launch zone” design including experiential installations, premium window displays and consumer journey.
- NYC flagship development of store zones.
- Created creative direction directive for Running category.
- Ideation for Basketball, Training and Women's categories' campaigns and positioning.
- Collaboration across categories, groups and stakeholders.

NB: Chris finished up at adidas working on the NYC store, when Global Brand Design yielded control of NYC flagship creative to the BJs in August. His LTD contract had been extended as far as internal rules allowed, there was no headcount for FTE and no budget for freelance.

Noble was thrown in the deep end at adidas Running. His first assignment was to create its new Extension, laying down the creative direction law for the brand's second-biggest category in fifty concise pages.

When adidas moved Running brand design to Europe, Noble pitched in on the Women's Extension and Training campaign direction, then Basketball, team-working on creative ideation for the biggest b-ball-shoe launch adidas has ever done. One of Noble's ideas became the basis for the whole campaign.

The VP of Brand Design then pulled him onto adidas's new and celebrated NYC flagship store. Noble designed big and small, from walls to gift cards. Wayfinding, much-shared graphical walls, footwear walls, retail tools, evergreen content and much more – a heavy dose of the design that now entrances the flagship's many visitors.

After the store opened, product launches began. Working with tight schedules, Chris was integral to creating super-premium launch zones and window displays. On top of that, rethinking other areas of the store was on his plate. Need a tier 2 launch zone with reusable launch tools and interactive thinking? Chris can design that. Sweep out an area for something more effective? Chris is on it.

Sole Proprietor and Maker,
Chroble, May 2014 – present

- Ideation, design, R&D and hand-crafting of product.
- Startup of micro-company.
- Brand design, web build, product photography, ecomm setup and management.

With his kids' Lego minifigures having nowhere to stay put, Chris invented and now builds and sells a gorgeous solution: exquisitely made walnut display shelves for the little plastic people, good enough for any weary workspace or well-kept kid's room. He also built a mini photo studio, shot and "shopped" the photos, made the website and does the Etsy thing, as well as BigCartel and Amazon. He's handy like that.

Rebranding Art Direction Events Multidisciplinary Budgeting

Art Director, MEDIAmerica,
January 2014 – March 2016

- Own creative direction and design of the company's flagship magazine, Oregon Business, and its products and channels.
- Rebranding to improve positioning and increase consumer appeal and respect in the marketplace.
- Build materials for digital, events, print and marketing in those spaces.
- Hire and lead creative staff and contributors.
- Keep everything under budget.

Chris put his back into art directing Oregon Business magazine and its events and made a hugely positive difference to the brand's standing and bottom line in a struggling marketplace. Hiring a tight budget and multiple talents, Chris also did the vast majority of the illustrations, infographics and some photography while keeping the staff photographer, interns and freelancers that he hired busy with well-directed assignments.

Freelance creative/designer,
2007 – present

- Art direction and design for a variety of clients including Nike, Eddie Bauer, retail stores, lifestyle and sport clothing companies and media brands.
- Design for branding, retail, environmental, marketing, packaging, video and motion graphics, animation (artistic and informational), clothing graphics, collateral and websites (including code).
- Re/branding and art direction of genre-leading sports magazines and supporting channels.

Chris has had some long-term work while in the wild – see below – and worked on retail, environmental, promotional, packaging, clothing graphics, advertising and websites for Nike, Eddie Bauer, Agave Denim, retail stores, bicycle brands, professional services, startups and others.

From 2010 to 2014 he was Art Director of the California-based Snowboarder Magazine and its various channels from events to video. Chris redesigned everything from day one to much good cheer and applause, including a new logo with upside-down “MAGAZINE” long before Comey Central did it. During his time there, the mag was the only one in the sector defying the print magazine downturn.

Noble won a fancy design award for Level and considers that magazine his baby, even though the print version died young – as only the good do. In 2009, largely to learn web code and design, he made and manages the online CMSS (content pattern), CSS, HTML and a little PHP, jQuery and JavaScript. (It's been unattended since 2012.)

For the 18 months after selling 4130 Publishing Ltd – see the next bit! – Chris continued as Art Director of Ride and all its design needs including digital and motion graphics. From his then-home in California. He also wrote most of the coverlines and picked the pull-quotes, chosen to be compelling and intriguing.

Creative Leadership Business Thinking Cross-Functional Hiring & Mentoring Multidisciplinary

Creative Director and co-owner, 4130 Publishing
(England), 1994 – 2007

- Co-ownership of the company and all responsibilities that go along with that, from finances to hiring to basic logistics.
- Ownership of company-wide, multi-brand creative.
- Award-winning art direction and design for some of the magazines all of the time, and all of the magazines some of the time.
- Ownership of marketing for all brands including traditional, digital, events and influencers.
- Day-to-day running of the company, hand-in-hand with co-owners.
- Building the company from a bootstrap to a world-renowned, market- and genre-leader.
- Leading a hand-picked and happy creative team.
- Leading creative projects for third-party clients, from eateries to fashion.

NB: In 2006 Chris and the other owners got an offer they couldn't refuse and sold the company.

On a shoestring, Noble cofounded the much-heralded 4130 Publishing Ltd. organically grew it as company director and creative director to publish six leading lifestyle and action-sports magazines.

During this time he also designed for third parties whose businesses ranged from fashion to high-tech consultancy. (He sold the successful company at the end of 2006 and added sticks to the USA.)

Here's what he got up to:

- Leadership and direction of creative, content and operations, including marketing and hiring.
- Mentored creative staff with a gentle hand, ticking off their artistic potential to seemingly magical effect.
- Art direction, design, production, publishing and a little writing and photography for Level, a lifestyle magazine. Level won the UK's coveted "Magazine Design Awards" going for "Best Designed Consumer Magazine of the Year".
- Long-running AD of Ride BMX Magazine (UK) and all related collateral from point-of-sale to B2B.
- Hands-on design and production of one magazine all of the time and all of the magazines some of the time.
- Design and production of all corporate art requirements.
- Design and production of all motion graphics for video output.
- IT management.
- Graphic design for James Holder: production and co-design of apparel, merchandising and POS/retail artwork for Bench, Chirle, Idea B and Judo clothing brands and The Big Baguette Store under the direction of the cofounder and Creative Director of Superdry.
